April is Poetry Month

April is National Poetry Month and the Restroom Reader is seeking poetry for the April 15 issue. Something light and witty that you can make up while having lunch with friends or while you were daydreaming in class; a poem you may have in your head while you wait in that traffic jam, or stand in line to pay a fee at the business office. You could write about your job, your family, or any amusing thing you saw during the day. Your poem could also be a group effort. Get together with your friends and each write a line. You may be a poet and not know it, so give it a try and send your poem to waklib@uwc.edu or drop it off at the library circulation desk. The winning poems will be published in the April 15 issue. If you prefer not to have your name in print we will still accept your poem. Just submit the poem to us with your name, it can be published anonymously.

#3wordstoliveby

Not only will the Restroom Reader be accepting original poetry submissions for the April 15th issue, we will also be posting the best “#3wordstoliveby”. What are your three words?

“Yes almost summer” “Keep moving forward” “Baseball is life”

Since the library at this time does not have a Twitter page, you can email your three words to waklib@uwc.edu or you can write them on the #3wordstoliveby easel in front of the library. We are looking forward to some tasteful, inspirational, and funny 3 words.
